Forecast For Northwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Friday 05 Feb 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Showery today. Much colder over the weekend.

Today:
The day will see scattered showers and patchy rain at times, possibly wintry over northern hills later in the afternoon. However, many parts will see dry and occasionally bright intervals, particularly in the south. Maximum temperature 8 deg C (46 deg F).

Tonight:
After a briefly dry start in some areas, showers will continue moving across the region, becoming more widespread during the small hours with some heavier bursts at times. Minimum temperature 4 deg C (39 deg F).

Saturday:
A wet start for many with outbreaks of rain. This will persist over Pennine areas, and turn increasingly to snow later. Turning drier in the afternoon, particularly along coastal areas. Maximum temperature 6 deg C (43 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Snow showers and a risk of icy stretches on Sunday. Further scattered snow showers on Monday and Tuesday. Feeling bitterly cold in strong easterly winds.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.